doubt that her husband would ever wear the imperial crown.

The civil authorities disclaim all responsibility for lack of protection, sponsibility for lack of protection, stoutly declaring that all arrangements for the visit to Bosnia were in the hands of the military authorities. However, even with all possible protection, it is doubtful if the Archduke could have escaped his fate, for he was trapped like a wild beast. He had no chance. Assassins lay in wait for him at every turn. Even if the revolver had not succeeded where the bomb had had not succeeded where the bombs and other revolvers ready and waiting. The city officials of Sarajevo say after the proudly told them no soldier wanted detectives dogging his footsteps.

Neither Realized Wound.

Neither Realized Wound.

A military official who was in full view of the terrible scene at Sarajevo says neither the Archduke nor the Duchess appeared to realize that either had been wounded until the Duchess fall into her husband's arms.

"What's the matter?" he fairly screamed, but even as he said it his uniform was reddened with blood.

The duchess clutched at her husband's neck with frantic fingers, as if trying to close the bulget wound, but as she saw the blood jet from between her hands she shrieked, "My God!" and sank backwards in the car, which raced to the palace. She died as she was was being taken inside the great doors. The archduke, limp in the hands of his bearers, opened his eyes several times and his hands caught at the empty air. Then he, too, gasped and died. A monk hurried to give the couple the last rites of the Church. Six doctors were summoned, but, of course, to no avail.

All Depends on Emperor.

All Depends on Emperor.

Tremendous interest now centres about the figure of the new heir. Speculation of all kinds is indulged in regarding his personality and his political views, but the general impression seems to prevail that the future of Austria-Hungary in the present crisis depends on the health of the great head of the noble house of Hapsburg. It is thought that if the health of the Emperor permits him to reign a few years longer the dual monarchy would be much better off than if a youthful and inexperienced ruler like the new heir should ascend the throne, although, to be sure, the young Archduke is popular and liberal in his views. It was said that Francis Ferdinand favored a sort of threefold system of government for the empire: instead of the present dual regime of Germans in Austria and Magyars in Hungary, he wished the great Slavic population in the two halves of the kingdom to be given some definite share in the government. It is declared authoritatively that he made clear promises in that direction to certain leaders of the Slav parties only a few months ago. His death, however, clear promises in that direction to certain leaders of the Slav parties only a few months ago. His death, however, removes this probability. It is likely the young successor would adhere to the Emperor's views. Some in Vienna say he would prove a second Francis Joseph if afforded the opportunity.
His foreign policy, it is practically certsin, would be strong support of Germany and the Triple Alliance. The influence of his uncles, the kings of Bavaria and Saxony, and the future
King of Würtemberg would, it is argued, keep him close to Germany.

Emperor William Going.

Emperor William will come with the Empress from Berlin to attend the funeral, and the Bavarian and Saxon kings, too, are expected. It is said tonight in Vienna that, even though the savehduke arranged long ago that he should be buried at his seat at Arsetten, so that he might lie beside the wife he sacrifice i much to wed, they might after all, have slept through the ages together in the Capuchin vaults, for it is believed that even the Emperor would have relented and allowed her, because of her bravery when her husband died, to occupy a place in the vaults kept Niagara Falls, Ont., June 29.—Final adjournment of the Niagara peace conference to-morrow or Wednesday is contemplated by the two mediators who are still here, although a decision will not be reached until Senor da Gama, the Ambassador of Brazil, returns from Long Branch to-morrow for a conference with his colleagues.

Teneral Carranza is understood to liarly replied to the invitation of the mediators to send representatives to take up with the Mexican delegates the internal affairs of Mexico that it would be necessary for him to confer with other generals of the Constitutionalist army, and it is assumed that this will

Should Carranza ultimately send representatives to confer with the Mexican delegates, as his note is said to indicate that he would, the mediators would, no doubt, go to the place of meeting in order to render any assistance within their power. But they cannot see any good purpose to be served by remaining

It is argued that Carranza could not, without breaking faith with his fellow delegates representatives clothed with plemary powers, but that by procuring the assent of his fellow chiefs he could effect a modification of the plan of Guadaloupe which would insure their support of a Provisional President to be chosen at a conference between the Constitutionalists' representatives and the Mexican delegates. It is on the assumption that this is the purpose of Carranza in further delaying the conferences between his representatives and the Mexicans that those who can discover grounds for optimism base their hopes.

Others here believe that Carranza is merely seeking excuses for delay, playing for time, in the hope that the negotiations may be prolonged until Villa can take Mexico City. Those who entertain this view say that nothing short of a peremptory demand by the administration at Washington that Carranza send here immediately rep-

ing short of a peremptory demand by the administration at Washington that Carranza send here immediately representatives instructed to reach an agreement with the Mexican can avert war between Mexico and the United States, because they believe Huerta will force invasion rather than permit Villa to take Mexico City. It will be seen, therefore, that opinion between the two philosophic camps in Niagara Fells is an divergent as are the purposes of the Constitutionalists and the Federalists.

When a week ago I first predicted a recess of the mediation conference the prediction was resented in some quarters and in others was denounced as wholly unjustified. But the recess followed, and now there is evidently a desire finally to close the conference. Whether recent revelations tending to show the connection between Standard Gil or its subsidiary, the Waters-Pierce Oil Company, and the Constitutionalist cause is playing a part in the desire of the mediators to get through and get away from here is not known. The revelations have proved sorely embarrassing to the American delegates.

The tragedy that has befallen the ill-fated house of Hapsburg, according rot all available news reaching London, was the result of a carefully prepared Servian Nationalist plot in revenge for the annexation of Bosnia and Herzegovina, which defeated the dreams and aspirations of creating a greater Servin.

neered by persons possessing more matter or particing ability than that of the youthful assassins. It is generally thought in Anstria and Hungary that the plotters had their headquarters in Belgrade, the Servian capital.

Servian hatred of Austrians, which always has been violent, has, it is pointed out, recently been fomented by the newspapers in Belgrade and by igitate the provided by the students and to induce them to sacrifice their lives in the belief that they will go down to history as patriots. Sunday's crime seems likely to have a centrary effect to that desired by its authors, for even before the bodies of the murdered couple have been interred the Austrian authorities are contemplating severe measures against the Serbs among the inhabitants of Austria and Bosnia, and these are likely further to embitter the relations between the two countries as well as those between Austria and Russia, the protector of all the Serbs.

Miss Schupp is a dancer. Her professional debut was made less than two months ago in this city. Under the tutelage of her mother, since her childhood, she has developed into a dancer of extraordinary merit. It was at a private choreographic performance late last summer, in the Schupp studio, on the roof of the apartment house in which she lives, on Riverside Drive, that Miss Schupp, known professionally as "Lada." danced herself to the attention of the Czar.

In the case of Miss Schupp, however, they said, instead of dancing a man's head off his shoulders, she has danced it back on.

Statements were issued yesterday by Charles R. Flint, a business associate of Henry Clay Pierce, head of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company, and by José Visconcelos, a member of the Constitution list junta in this country, in explaint.

The issuance of the Statement's was provoked by the public.

Among the dances Miss Schupp executed for the guests, including the grand duke, was a Russian number that fascinated the titled visitor. He requested her to give him a copy of the composition, a haunting, dreamy air, so that he might take it home with him and, through the imperial ballet, introduce it to the Czar.

Miss Schupp hesitated to comply with the request. The piece was one which Ivan Narodny had composed and called "The Dance of Lost Hope."

So insistent was the grand duke that in the control of the statement's was provoked by the public. Among the dances Miss Schupp exe-

Answering the intimation that railroad and oil interests in Mexico controlled by American capital have maintained a close connection with the Constitutional faction, and that such connection has been inimical to internal peace in Mexico, Mr. Flint said:

"The Constitutionalists have been so successful that a provisional government must soon be established, either by the triumph of their arms or by a compromise under the auspices of the mediators. It is therefore imperative that provision should now be made for the permission of the grand duke asked the name of the composition, she replied, "The Waltz Without a Name."

Villa has sent an ultimatum to Car-ranza, it is asserted here, demanding the immediate release to Villa's army of all ammunition the rebels received at Tampico, and which Carrenza is holding. Villa also demands that Car-ranza acknowledge him as military chief of all Mexico.

Failure to accide to the two de-mands, it is said, will result in forcible measures being taken by Villa to se-cure the ammunition and the authority covets.

Outwitted by Carranza.

Carranza, it appears, has outwitted Villa in the ammunition matter, having promised the army of the north its share of the cargo of the Antilla at Tampico and then refused to release the munitions when Villa failed to go to the relief of General Natera at Zacaexpecting a large snipment from Tam-pico, but has learned that Carranza has decided not to let him have any. This was the matter on which the two leaders finally came to the breaking point. Now, it is said, Villa is making active preparations to move his army into Carranza territory and to force the first chief to recede from his attitude. Villa's visit to Chihushus City is be lieved to be to gather up what ammuni-tion he can to enable him to move against Carranza. Villa men say Car-ranza has fewer than 5,000 men he could count upon should hostilities be against Carranza. Villa men say Carranza has fewer than 5,000 men he could count upon should hostilities be opened with Villa, and that the latter has with him 20,000 men under arms and can count on as many more who nominally are with Carranza.
